Updates to the course will include utilization of a new textbook (low-cost, consumer-based, trade publication); reassessment of specific topic student learning outcomes; video recording (with closed-captioning in English and subtitling in Spanish) of interviews of K-State faculty involved in food, nutrition, dietetics, and health research; redesigning course assignments to continue to reflect course outcomes while at the same time adapting to changes in available resources (e.g. discontinuance of USDA dietary analysis programs) and teaching assistant availability for the course (more auto-graded content). In addition, we plan to include a Spanish-language component to this course (e.g. content given in both English and Spanish) to help our department stay on the cutting edge of online education and achieve our vision and mission.
